

International Conference on Computers & Industrial Engineering CIE45

Call for papers -- Special Session on: Transportation for CIE45 October 28-30, 2015 - Metz, France

Session chair

Prof. Anass Nagih, University of Lorraine, France

Session description

Mobility is central to many current issues. It concerns a variety of sectors (air, rail, road and marine, energy, telecommunications ...). With the increasing complexity of production systems, the development, management and control of transport systems are increasingly difficult. In this context, it becomes essential for policymakers to measure the impact of different choices. Hence the importance of having efficient mathematical and computational tools to measure the impacts of a policy, both economic and environmental aspects. This session can propose theoretical research, algorithmic approaches or innovative frameworks for analyzing and optimizing complex systems in transport.

Topics

- ▶ Vehicles and networks routing
- ▶ Operational, tactical and strategic planning
- ▶ Mathematical modelling and algorithmic approaches
- ▶ Sustainable mobility and resources optimization
- ▶ Robustness and efficiency
